Dear BCG X Hiring Team,

I am a software engineering student, but I've discovered a real passion for design along the way. I was excited to see your posting for a UX/UI Design Internship because it seems to be a perfect mix of my two interests.

I'm comfortable using Figma to create wireframes and build prototypes. My engineering background is helpful because it forces me to think about whether my designs are practical to build. I try to make choices that are creative but also sensible, so that the final design works well for both the user and the developers who will bring it to life.

Through my different projects in college, I've learned that good design is really about solving problems. It's a process of listening to what people need, trying out ideas, and then listening to their feedback. I've learned how to take different opinions into account and how to explain my own ideas clearly, which I imagine is very important for working on a team.

The reason I'm so interested in BCG X is that you work on big, real-world problems where design, technology, and business strategy all meet. The chance to learn how that works from the inside is a huge opportunity for me. I am proficient in both English and French and am very eager to learn from your team.

I would be happy to discuss my application and share my portfolio with you.

Sincerely,

Youssef Amazzal
